Reception to Bridal Couple.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
LOUISA, Va., October 3.—On Saturday evening last, quite a number of people from the neighborhood assembled at the depot at Louisa to welcome Mr. Thomas E. Winston and his bride.
Mrs. Lillian Belle Winston is the handsome daughter of Mr. Thomas Woodings and the late Mrs. Olivia Woodings, of Pittsylvania county, Va. The happy pair were united in marriage at the home of the bride on Wednesday, September 23, and immediately after the ceremony, took the train at Franklin Junction, on the Southern Railroad, for Washington, D. C. On the departure of the bride from her home, many were the kind words and congratulations of her friends and neighbors, but the bride's wealth was not so much a subject of conversation as they had so tenderly woven words show her and there a sprig of cypress, and smiles intermingled, as they parted with their guests.
The bride and groom were the guests on Saturday night of Captain W. T. Wade and the Misses Winston, at Winston Hall, where an informal reception was held, attended only by immediate friends and relatives. A sumptuous wedding supper was served and enjoyed.
The bride presents were very pretty and many of them of real value. Cut-glass and the "precious metals" were conspicuously in evidence.
Mr. and Mrs. Winston are domiciled in their pretty home, "West End," overlooking the lower end of Roundabout Valley.

Luck in Numbers

They say that there is luck in numbers, an axiom that I will not contest, since there is no rule without an exception. But I do know that almost since the world began, certain numbers have been thought anything but lucky. The ancients, I am told, were wont to look with much suspicion upon the number seven, and there is no doubt that three months ago the number thirteen is held in much disrepute. Also, to come up to the present time, the number twenty-three is thought by some people to have a peculiarly unfortunate significance.
So, having found three exceptions to the above rule, I will go even further and say that there are very many numbers that are supposed to be unlucky in a purely personal manner to certain individuals. There are the dates of certain days of the week and month, the numbers of streets, of houses, of racing and lottery tickets—of almost anything that can be numbered, for we are all superstitious at heart, and are ever willing to help along the luck by avoiding whatever we think is harmful to it.
Mr. Slink's unlucky number was three, and it had pursued him all his life with its baleful influence. The third child in his family, he had been born, and three months after his father's death, thereby falling through the oversight of the deceased gentleman to come into any of his estate. And as if this was not enough, he was also deprived of his portion of his mother's property, which, twice a year, a widow, married again. The third husband having acquired a peculiar dislike for Mr. Slink, he was cast into the cold world at the tender age of fifteen, and so, through the machinations of the cruel number, he was forced to shift for himself.
But it would weary you to continue with the list of his misfortunes. No matter what business he embarked upon, he failed utterly and ignominiously. Always he was a loser, and a woman searching, to find that the unlucky three had been at the bottom of it all.
Finally, when nearing middle age, he decided to give up the unequal struggle, and let some one support him in the care of his wife. Now to do this one must find a person with both money and the inclination to marry; but Mr. Slink was not daunted by a small matter of this sort. Setting forth, he cruised determinedly about the coast of Louisiana, until he found the lady that he sought. And once having found her, he pressed his suit so earnestly that in three short weeks they were married.
Perhaps if you had seen the bride you would not have been surprised at the brevity of the courtship, for she was tall and thin and determined, with the looks and disposition of a snapping turtle. Also she had buried two husbands, which should have been a deadly combination for Mr. Slink. But the husbands had been thrifty, leaving many broad acres, and Mr. Slink was becoming resigned to his fate.
"It sure is takin' a chance," said he to himself one day before his marriage. "It sure is takin' a chance, but I reckon it's sorter givin' me a little luck, seein' I'm marryin' money. I ain't no one's pretty, but there must be somethin' to her, seein' she's had two husbands already. I wonder what killed 'em? Anyhow, it looks as if things was comin' my way." But as for his overconfidence, in less than three days it was a snarl and a snarl, and he was harder than it had ever been before. Instead of a wealthy countryman, he found himself a farm hand, and a farm hand who had to work for his money. Every morning before day did his wife drive him forth to work, and when he returned at night there was no rest from the bitterness of her tongue, until he had closed his eyes in sleep. In less than a week Mr. Slink ceased to wonder how his predecessors had died, for he knew now that she had worked them to death.
It was awful, it was unendurable; it was more than living man could stand. And so, after waiting three years to see if he would not die like the other two, Mr. Slink gave it up, and ran away to the city.
At the time of which I write he had been for three months a slight apologetic figure of a man with watery blue eyes, that seemed to stare in mild protest at the malevolence of his fate. How he lived during these ninety days of hiding it would be hard to say. Having no regular vocation he did an odd job that presented itself, and usually, as was his misfortune, he did it badly. When he had money he ate, and when he had none he thought of his next meal. But hungry though he might be, he was ever contented, for
